

FLUID HANDLING INDUSTRY MARKET REPORT

M&A TRANSACTIONS 2017

2017 Market Update

February 2018

This is a report on merger and acquisition transactions announced in 2017 for manufacturers, distributors or service providers for dynamic (rotating or reciprocating) fluid handling equipment and related products - except drivers – for industrial, commercial and residential markets. The report is compiled by Global Equity Consulting and City Capital Advisors, providing merger and acquisition and strategic advisory services including buy-side and sell-side representation, debt and equity capital formation, leveraged buyouts and ownership recapitalizations for the fluid handling industry.

Fluid Handling Industry Deal Activity Up Significantly in 2017

The fluid handling industry deal volume was up 18% in 2017 with 57 transactions vs. 48 in 2016. The activity was quite evenly spread through the year with 29 transactions announced in the first half of the year and 28 announced transactions in the second half. The substantial increase in activity in the fluid handling industry was in contrast with the general worldwide deal activity that is seen to be essentially flat for 2017 vs. 2016. As shown below, industry transactions peaked in 2014 with 76 transactions and stepped down each year in 2015 and 2016 before rebounding in 2017. Since the macro M&A conditions did not materially change in 2017 we need to look to other factors that might be influencing the industry activity.

Factors Driving Activity

In addition to a continuation of the generally favorable M&A conditions it would seem that certain other factors are driving transactions in the fluid handling industry:

1. Focus on Water – in 2017 there was a dramatic increase in industry M&A activity around water as an end-use market. In the 2015 we saw four water focused transactions, in 2016 we saw seven. However, in 2017 there were 19 water-focused transactions accounting for 33% of the 57 total industry transactions.
2. Strategic Factors – various strategic factors were at work driving activity including: spin-offs and divestures for the purpose of enabling more clear focus on core markets; vertical integration with manufacturers integrating into their sales channel; expanding market presence in North America.
3. Increased Private Equity Activity in the Industry – historically the M&A activity in the fluid handling industry has been driven by strategic activity with private equity typically accounting for only about 10% of the transaction activity. However, we saw a significant increase in private equity activity in 2017 with 32% of the activity private equity related, either IPOs (2), exits (5); secondary transactions (2) or acquisitions (9).
